Mâir Bull is an Educational Developer in Manchester Metropolitan University's new Centre for Learning Enhancement and Educational Development (LEED). LEED enables the University to accelerate educational change and innovation across the institution with a wide range of activities including teaching, projects and initiatives, academic development and leadership.

Mâir is the Programme Lead for the trailblazing Short Courses, part of the Department for Education's lifelong learning pilot. The suite of short courses are primarily focused on developing the Early Years workforce in collaboration with Greater Mancheser Combined Authority (GMCA).

In addition, Mâir is the Academic Lead for the University's personal and professional development framework for students, Future me plan. Future me plan uses a competency-based framework, alongside a coaching approach, to create a coherence mechanism for students. Future me plan empowers students, with support and scaffolding, to realise their aspirations.

Mâir achieved a PG Cert in Higher Education and was awarded a Fellowship of the Higher Education Academy in 2022.

Before moving to Higher Education, Mâir was a teacher for 16 years predominately in secondary schools. However, she also taught in primary, SEND, FE and in a prison.

In 2019-20, Mâir completed a Master's in Educational Leadership and Management, whilst working for BBC Bitesize as a content writer and teaching for the educational charity, The Talent Foundry, leading careers workshops for students across the North West.

Mâir is also passionate about widening particiaption of women in sport and as such, co-founded the women and girls' section of her local cricket club, where she still volunteers and plays.
